NEW PROGRAMS / PROGRAMMES NOUVEAUX

University of Saskatchewan ~ Bioresource Policy, Business & Economics
A new Post-Graduate Diploma in Aboriginal Agriculture and Land Management was launched in January 2011. This one-year PGD (30 credit units) is designed to provide students holding a Bachelor's Degree in a non-agricultural discipline with sufficient training in agri-business, land management and aboriginal governance to enable them to operate at the interface between the agri-business sector and the aboriginal community.
University of Winnipeg
The Department of Economics is pleased to announce the launch of a new graduate program in September 2012 – a Master of Arts degree in Environmental, Resource and Development Economics . This program is designed for students interested in the economics of sustainable development. In addition to core courses in economic theory and quantitative methods, students will take field courses in environmental, resource and development economics. Students will also be required to complete a research project under the supervision of one of our faculty members. Further information can be found at: http://www.uwinnipeg.ca/erde/ .

OBITUARIES

David Hopper (February 22, 1927 - November 22, 2011)

The Canadian agricultural economist David Hopper, founding president of the International Development Research Centre, passed away in November at his home outside Washington, DC, at the age of 84. He was born in Ottawa in 1927, the second of three sons of Clayton Hopper, an agricultural economist, and of Eva Hill Hopper, a businesswoman. David Hopper graduated in agriculture from McGill University's Macdonald College, in Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec, in 1950, and then went to study agricultural economics and cultural anthropology at Cornell University. He received his PhD from Cornell in 1957, after two years in a village in India, observing its economic organization for his dissertation. He became an associate professor of agricultural economics at the Ontario Agricultural College (now the University of Guelph) in 1957, and was also a visiting professor of agricultural economics at the Ohio State University and the University of Minnesota. David Hopper returned to India as an agricultural economist with the Ford Foundation in New Delhi in 1962, and then from 1966 was associate field director for the Rockefeller Foundation's agricultural program in India, as well as deputy team leader for Asian Development Bank's Asian Agricultural Survey and a consultant to the World Bank on Indian farming. His outstanding achievement was as the founding president of the International Development Research Centre (IDRC) from 1970 to 1978, giving Canada new prominence in development studies with the first international organization to focus exclusively on helping researchers in developing countries contribute to solving the problems of their own countries. After establishing the IDRC as a going concern with regional offices in Colombia, Kenya, Lebanon, Senegal, and Singapore (and after marrying Ruth Zagorin, head of the social science division of IDRC), David Hopper joined the World Bank in 1978 as vice-president for South Asia and then as senior vice-president for policy planning and research until his retirement in 1990.

Gideon Rosenbluth (January 23, 1921 - August 8, 2011)

The distinguished progressive scholar and activist Gideon Rosenbluth, professor emeritus of economics at the University of British Columbia, died of a heart attack at the age of ninety while swimming with a friend this past August. A Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, he served as president of the Canadian Economics Association (1978-79) and of the Canadian Association of University Teachers (1966-67), as managing editor of the Canadian Journal of Economics (1973-76, initially with Bernard Bonin and then on his own), and as an elected member of UBC's Senate and Board of Governors.

Born in Berlin in 1921, Gideon was the second of three children in a Jewish family. The family moved to England when the Nazis took power in 1933. Gideon went to school in England, and studied economics at the London School of Economics from 1939. In June 1940, Gideon and many other Jewish refugees (including my uncle) were interned and then transported to camps in Canada – apparently the British Government did not distinguish clearly between Jewish refugees and pro-Nazi enemy aliens. Once released, Gideon enrolled in October 1941 (a few weeks after the semester began) as one of ten students in the third year of the University of Toronto's honours program in economics and political science, a cohort that included the noteworthy future economists Meyer Bucovetsky and Harry Johnson, cofounder with Gideon of a political economy club (Rosenbluth 2001). They studied J. M. Keynes with recent Harvard graduate Roger Anderson and the history of political thought with C. Brough Macpherson, while Harold Innis made them write essays relating the ideas of Joan Robinson and Edward Chamberlin on imperfect and monopolistic competition and Joseph Schumpeter on business cycles to Canada's economic past and present. After graduating from Toronto, Gideon worked at the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and then the National Bureau of Economic Research. He took his PhD in economics at Columbia University, and taught at Princeton and Stanford. He returned to Canada to teach at Queen's, moving to UBC in 1962. In a 1968 survey of Canadian contributions to economics, Harry Johnson characterized Gideon's NBER monograph on Concentration in Canadian Manufacturing Industries (1957) as having "attained a classic status in its field." Gideon continued this research interest in imperfect and monopolistic competition with an examination of Canadian Anti-Combines Administration, 1952-1960 (Rosenbluth and Thorburn 1963). In addition to these applied studies, Gideon collaborated with UBC colleagues on demand theory (Archibald and Rosenbluth 1975, Lipsey and Rosenbluth 1971). Gideon's presidential address to the Canadian Economics Association developed an economic model of the supply of and demand for scholarly articles, which he applied to the history of the CJE and its predecessor, the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science (Rosenbluth 1979).

A founder of the BC branch of the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, Gideon Rosenbluth was committed to social justice and to the use of economic analysis for the benefit of humanity, rather than as an abstract exercise in intellectual puzzle-solving. He wrote a notable study of The Canadian Economy and Disarmament (1967) during the Vietnam War, took a leading role in critiquing the economic policies of small-c conservative BC governments (Allen and Rosenbluth, eds., 1986 and 1992), and, especially in recent years, engaged in scholarly environmental activism, writing with his former student Peter Victor (e.g. Victor and Rosenbluth 2007). Beloved by his family and his many friends, respected and admired by colleagues and generations of students, Gideon Rosenbluth stayed active physically and as a scholar and socially-concerned citizen to the end of a full and productive life.

ANNOUNCEMENT / ANNONCE

Creation of the GILLES DOSTALER AWARD

Thanks to the generosity of his widow MARIELLE CAUCHY, a new academic prize is created in the memory of our colleague and friend GILLES DOSTALER.

This prize - of 500 euros - will recognize scholarly achievements of young research fellows working on one of Gilles Dostaler's many fields of interest. It will be awarded to scholars below the age of 40 in recognition of an outstanding work not necessarily already published.

As for the other ESHET academic awards, self-nominations are not allowed. The name of the laureate will be announced at the annual conference of the European Society for the History of Economic Thought (ESHET).

For the 2012 prize, nominations should be sent by the end of February to PROFESSOR CATHERINE MARTIN : Catherine.Martin@univ-paris1.fr

For the ESHET Executive Committee and Council,
Gilbert Faccarello
